

DETAILED CONTENTS

Exhibits	ix
Acknowledgments	xii
1. Introduction: The Pervasiveness (and Limitations) of Measurement	1
Data for Thought	5
Reliability, Validity, and Sources of Error in the Measurement of Social Phenomena	8
Reliability and Validity in Survey Research	9
Reliability and Validity Issues Related to the Questionnaire and Respondents	15
Measuring Crime and Deviance	19
Conclusion	28
The Design of This Book	28
Review Questions	29
Internet Exercises	29
2. The History of Measuring Crime	30
The Early History of Measuring Social Phenomena and Crime	31
The Development of Uniform Crime Reports in the United States	40
The Dark Figure and Additional Problems With Crime Statistics	45
Early Self-Report Studies	49
Victimization Surveys	61
Summary and Conclusions	63
Review Questions	64
Internet Exercise	64
3. Official Crime Data	65
Uniform Crime Reports in the United States	66

Data Collection Procedures Under the Uniform Crime Reports Program	68
Classifying and Scoring Criminal Offenses in the UCR Program	69
National Incident-Based Reporting System Official Crime Trends and Patterns Based on Uniform Crime Reports	75
Problems With Police Data on Crime	80
Official Crime Data in International Context	93
Summary and Conclusions	108
Review Questions	115
Internet Exercises	116
4. Self-Report Studies	117
The Method Behind the Measure	118
Self-Reports on Crime and Delinquency	122
Social Correlates of Self-Reported Offending	138
Reliability and Validity of Self-Report Data	141
Self-Reports From Known Criminals and Delinquents	142
Summary and Conclusions	148
Review Questions	149
Internet Exercises	150
5. Victimization Surveys	151
The National Crime Victimization Survey	152
Victimization Rates and Characteristics of the Victims, Offenders, and Incidents	163
Other Victimization Surveys	173
International Victimization Surveys	173
Problems With Victimization Surveys	175
Summary and Conclusions	189
Review Questions	190
Internet Exercises	190
6. Crime Patterns, Evaluating Crime Policies, and Criminological Theories	193
Crime Trends	194
Using Crime Data to Evaluate Crime Policies	198
Testing Criminological Theory	205
Racial Profiling/Biased Policing	208
Recent Developments in Official Data, Self-Reports, and Victimization Surveys	214
Summary and Conclusions	221

Review Questions	222
Internet Exercises	222
References	223
Index	246
About the Authors	265